Introduction

This is a consultation on specific proposals for changing the staff:child ratio requirements for two-year olds in group-based early years settings, ratio flexibilities for childminders, and supervision requirements when children are eating within early years settings.

Who this is for?

This consultation is for anybody with an interest in childcare. This includes:

- parents and carers, and organisations representing them
- early education and childcare providers
- early years and childcare practitioners
- nursery schools and schools with early years provision.
- childminders
- childminder agencies
- charities
- local authorities
- sector organisations
- childcare matching services, including third party digital platforms
- Ofsted

Issue date

The consultation was issued on 4 July 2022

Enquiries

If your enquiry is related to the policy content of the consultation you can contact the team on email: childcare.consultation@education.gov.uk

If your enquiry is related to the DfE e-consultation website or the consultation process in general, you can contact the DfE Ministerial and Public Communications Division by email: Consultations.Coordinator@education.gov.uk or by telephone: 0370 000 2288 or via the DfE Contact us page.

Additional copies are available electronically and can be downloaded from GOV.UK DfE consultations.

The response

A summary of the responses to this consultation and the Department's response will be published on GOV.UK in Autumn 2022.

About this consultation

The aim of the consultation is to gather a wide range of views on the specifics of our policy proposals to help us reach well-informed and fair decisions.

This consultation document asks questions in relation to proposals to:

1. change the current statutory minimum staff:child ratios in England for 2-year-olds from 1:4 to 1:5, which would align with Scottish ratio requirements for 2-year-olds.
2. change the early years foundation stage statutory framework (the EYFS) to be explicit that childminders can care for more than the specified maximum of three children under the age of 5 if they are caring for siblings of children they already care for, or if the childminder is caring for their own baby or child.
3. change the early years foundation stage statutory framework (the EYFS) to be explicit that “adequate supervision” while children are eating means that children must be in sight and hearing of an adult.

The proposals in this consultation relate to children in England only.

To help us understand how the proposed changes to early years staff:child ratios might affect early years provision, the Department for Education has commissioned the National Centre for Social Research (NatCen) and Frontier Economics to conduct a study with early years providers. Early years providers who took part in the 2021 survey of childcare and early years providers conducted by NatCen on behalf of DfE and agreed to take part in future research are being invited to take part in this study over the next few weeks. Participants taking part in the survey are also able to take part in this consultation.

The responses to the questionnaire will be used to inform the consultation responses provided here. A summary report of responses from the study will be published on GOV.UK alongside the consultation response.

Deadline

The consultation closes at 11.45 pm on 16 September 2022.

Ministerial Foreword

Every child deserves a great start in life, and this Government is committed to ensuring all families get the support they need when they need it. This includes providing children and families with access to high quality early education and childcare, helping children to learn in their earliest years, providing enriching experiences around school hours, and supporting a functioning economy by enabling parents to work.

Every day in this country millions of parents leave their children in the care of early education and childcare professionals in nurseries, childminding settings, holiday activity providers, and before- and after-school care. They do so in the knowledge that their child will be safe, well cared for, and that they will enjoy enriching experiences that support their development.

We can rightly be proud of our early education and childcare and of the dedicated professionals who work in the sector. During the pandemic, early education and childcare staff worked tirelessly to keep their settings open wherever possible, supporting millions of parents to keep working, and ensuring children continued to have access to high quality early learning even in the most difficult of circumstances.

In January 2022, the Secretary of State for Education set out a bold and ambitious reform agenda based around three key priorities: skills, schools, and families. As part of this, I am working across government to take a renewed look into the childcare system to find ways to improve the cost and availability of childcare and early education for families across England.

Safety and quality will be at the heart of our proposals to ensure we do not compromise on provision for our youngest children. We also know that flexibility for providers is key to achieving a thriving childcare system that provides the care that parents are seeking. I am committed to working with parents and the sector to understand how best to deliver this.

As a first step, we are consulting on a small number of changes to the adult to child ratio requirements and to the supervision requirements when children are eating in early years settings. These proposals give settings greater flexibility in deciding how best to staff their settings, according to the needs of their children.

We hope to hear from as many people and organisations so we can gather a broad range of views to help us reach well-informed and fair decisions.

Background

Early education and childcare play an important role in our society. The early years of a child's life are critical for their development and will shape their lives for years to come. Children who spend time in high quality early education and childcare before they are old enough to start school have better educational outcomes later on in life¹.

The majority of working parents need childcare in some form to help them balance work and family life. In 2019, around three quarters of all parents of children aged under 5 used some form of childcare, including family and friends and 57% of families reported paying for childcare².

The quality of early years provision has been improving over the last decade. In 2019, 71.8% of five-year-olds reached a good level of development across all the learning goals in the Early Years Foundation Stage Profile, compared with 51.7% in 2013³. At the end of 2021, Ofsted reported that 97% of the early years childcare providers registered with them had been judged either good or outstanding at their latest inspection⁴.

Yet the benefits of attending childcare for children cannot be realised if parents cannot afford to use it. Nor can it help parents to work if it costs more than the income they would receive. Parents in the UK pay among the highest net costs for childcare in the OECD⁵, with much of a second earner's wages going just to pay childcare costs⁶. The fees charged for childcare have increased above inflation since 2019⁷.

The Government is committed to ensuring parents can access high quality, flexible childcare, and understand the support they are entitled to. We are already working across government to:

- increase awareness and take up of government-funded early education and childcare schemes to make sure all parents are accessing the support for childcare costs to which they are entitled. Government spends over £3.5 bn a year on the early years entitlements, and alongside this consultation we are also consulting on the early years national funding formula to ensure that this funding is distributed fairly across different parts of the country.

- review regulation of childcare to make sure that it is proportionate and effective and is not driving unnecessary burdens and costs on childcare providers, enabling a competitive and thriving childcare market that delivers high quality and safe provision across the country.

This consultation kicks off activity on the last of these points. We are seeking views from parents, childcare staff and managers, organisations, and other interested parties to enable Government to take the right steps to tackle these challenges.

We are committed to working with early years childcare providers, schools, parents, and carers to ensure we build upon the strengths of the current system and respond appropriately to the challenges ahead, working towards a childcare offer that works for families now and in the future.

About you

Staff:child ratios

Background

Staff:child ratios are set out in the Early Years Foundation Stage statutory framework (the EYFS) as the number of children per staff member. The minimum ratio requirements vary according to the age of the child and the qualification level of staff. They apply to the total number of staff available to work directly with children. The EYFS states that ‘exceptionally, and where the quality of care and safety and security of all children is maintained, changes to the ratios may be made’.

Staffing ratios have existed largely unchanged since the 1970s, and in the later 1980s were codified based on common practice at the time. Whilst the department keeps EYFS requirements under internal review on a regular basis, the last formal review of staff:child ratios was in 2013; no changes were made following the review.

The proposals in this consultation are different from the 2013 proposals. We are proposing to make changes to the statutory minimum ratios for children aged two in group-based settings, and to provide clarification around the flexibility in childminder ratios for sibling groups and for childminder’s own children. Staff costs account for 74% of the cost of running a childcare setting for group-based providers, and we know that regulations on minimum ratios drive key decisions about staffing. Current, and proposed, ratios are minimum requirements – we know that childminders and managers of early years setting know their children best, so it is right that we give them the flexibility they need to staff their settings based on their knowledge of the care and education their children require at any time.

Childminders are an important part of the early years sector, providing childcare that is flexible and affordable. Both of these are priorities for parents⁸. However, childminder numbers have declined steadily year on year⁹.

While the decline in childminder numbers has not affected the overall sufficiency of early years childcare places, it has reduced the availability of one form of affordable and flexible childcare, limiting parental choice. The two proposals in this consultation are designed to provide childminders with greater clarity about how they can apply their ratios in specific circumstances.

Of course, high-quality provision is not only based on the number of staff in the setting, but also on other factors, including the quality and expertise of the workforce. Any changes to ratios must be considered alongside wider conversations about how government and the sector can work together to continue to prioritise workforce development. That's why we are investing up to £153m in workforce development and support to build a stronger, more expert workforce in the early years sector as part of our education recovery package.

This builds on the reforms to the Early Years Foundation Stage (EYFS) curriculum and assessment requirements, which became statutory this year. The EYFS reforms and significant investment in workforce development will ensure all early years practitioners are skilled in delivering and embedding evidence-based approaches to educating the children in their care. This work is particularly focused on supporting children with special educational needs and disabilities and supporting all children with their communication and language, early numeracy, and their personal, social, and emotional development.

This consultation is the first step in a longer reform journey. As we continue this journey, there may be opportunities to explore further reform, and questions 12 and 13 invite early views on some potential further options. At this stage, these options are not formal proposals that we are consulting on; instead, question 12 and 13 will be used to gather evidence to understand more about the needs of the sector. We will continue to work collaboratively with parents and the sector to shape the regulatory framework to meet their needs, and the needs of all children who attend early years settings.

Proposal and rationale

This consultation invites views on three specific proposals to change the regulatory framework for those providing childcare and early education. The consultation questions on ratios relate solely to changes in staff:child ratios. We are not proposing any changes to qualification requirements and responders should assume that current qualification requirements set out in the EYFS will apply to any changes that may be made to ratios as part of this consultation. If implemented, these proposed changes to ratios would amend the existing statutory minimum requirements, however providers will continue to be free to staff above these minimum requirements if that is their preference. These changes would hand greater autonomy to settings and childminders to:

- expand their reach so that as many families as possible can benefit from affordable, flexible childcare, and;
- exercise greater professional judgement in deciding the makeup of the groups of children they care for and/or the way in which they staff their settings, according to the needs of their children.

Proposal A: Group-based settings

The first proposal concerns staff:child ratios when caring for 2-year-olds in group-based settings. Changes to the EYFS will be required via amendments to the EYFS (Welfare Requirements) Regulations 2012, paragraph 3.33.

These changes would align the English system to that of Scotland. The Scottish system has similar ratios to England, but these differ for children aged 2. Whilst in England our ratio is 1:4 (one adult to four children), Scotland applies ratios of 1:5 (one adult to five children). We have also considered other international examples. While like-for-like comparisons must be treated with caution due to very different childcare systems, England's statutory minimum staff:child ratios for 2-year-olds are among the highest in Europe.¹⁰

We are proposing to move to the Scottish ratios for 2-year-olds on the basis that Scotland has a similar childcare system to England, we have no evidence to suggest that the Scottish model is unsafe, and evidence shows high parental satisfaction rates. In 2018, a survey of parents in Scotland found 96% of parents were satisfied with how staff interact with their child, 90% of parents were satisfied with the extent to which their child received personal care and attention tailored to specific needs.¹¹

The proposed changes to the EYFS are as follows:

Current wording for children aged two years:

- there must be at least one member of staff for every four children.
- at least one member of staff must hold an approved level 3 qualification.
- at least half of all other staff must hold an approved level 2 qualification.

Proposed new wording for children aged two:

- there must be at least one member of staff for every five children
- at least one member of staff must hold an approved level 3 qualification
- at least half of all other staff must hold an approved level 2 qualification

Question

10. Do you agree or disagree with the proposed change to the current statutory minimum staff:child ratios in England for 2-year-olds from 1:4 to 1:5? Please explain your rationale for these views.

Recommended response = not more than 300 words

Proposal B and C: Childminder settings

The second and third proposals concern the staff:child ratios for childminders when caring for sibling groups (Proposal B) and their own children (Proposal C). These changes would require changes to the EYFS paragraph 3.43 via amendments to the EYFS (Welfare Requirements) Regulations 2012.

Within the specified ratios, the EYFS limits childminders to caring for a maximum of one child under the age of 1, a maximum of three children under the age of 5, and a maximum of six children under the age of 8. However, it does provide examples of limited flexibility within ratios to enable childminders to care for sibling babies (i.e., siblings under 1-year old) or the childminder's own baby, providing the needs of all children can be met. We are consulting on two proposals to specify a greater level of flexibility within these rules.

Proposal B will change language so it is clear that childminders can care for more than the specified maximum of three children under the age of 5 if they are caring for sibling babies or the sibling of another child they care for.

Proposal C will change language so it is clear that childminders can care for more than the specified maximum of three children under the age of 5, if they are also caring for their own baby and/or their own child.

For both Proposal B and Proposal C, childminders will still be limited to caring for a maximum of six children under the age of 8. These proposals will provide additional flexibility in the age mix of the children childminders care for to better meet the needs of parents and grow their business, whilst maintaining safety and quality.

The current wording of paragraph 3.43 of the EYFS is:

3.43 If a childminder can demonstrate to parents and/or carers and Ofsted inspectors or their childminder agency that the individual needs of all the children are being met, exceptions to the usual ratios can be made for example:

- when childminders are caring for sibling babies, or
- when caring for their own baby, or
- to maintain continuity of care, or
- if children aged three to five only attend the childminding setting before and/or after a normal school day, and/or during school holidays, they may be cared for at the same time as three other young children.

In all circumstances, the total number of children under the age of eight being cared for must not exceed six per adult.

The proposed new wording, below, would remove ‘babies’ from the wording of the first bullet point, and change the wording of the second bullet point from ‘baby’ to ‘child’, to clarify that flexibility is not limited to only babies in these scenarios.

3.43 If a childminder can demonstrate to parents and/or carers and Ofsted inspectors or their childminder agency that the individual needs of all the children are being met, exceptions to the usual ratios can be made for example:

- when childminders are caring for siblings, or
- when caring for their own child, or
- to maintain continuity of care, or
- if children aged three to five only attend the childminding setting before and/or after a normal school day, and/or during school holidays, they may be cared for at the same time as three other young children.

In all circumstances, the total number of children under the age of eight being cared for must not exceed six per adult.

Questions

11. Do you agree or disagree with Proposal B to change the EYFS wording on childminders’ ratio flexibility for siblings? Please explain your rationale for these views.

Recommended response = not more than 300 words

12. Do you agree or disagree with Proposal C to change the EYFS wording on ratio flexibility for childminders’ own children? Please explain your rationale for these views.

Recommended response = not more than 300 words

Further options for ratio reform

We are also investigating further options for ratio reform. These options are not being proposed as part of this formal consultation. However, answers to these questions will inform options for reform as we continue to work collaboratively with parents and the sector to shape the regulatory framework.

These options are informed by practices in other countries. In particular:

- The ratio for children aged 3 and over in Scotland is 1:8. However, this can be increased to 1:10 for children aged 3 and over attending day care facilities for a session of less than a continuous period of four hours in any day, providing individual children do not attend more than one session per day.
- In the Netherlands a calculation formula is applied to determine the number of staff needed to look after children in either a mixed age group or a same age group.¹² This means that in group-based settings, a ratio can apply across a mixed age group of children, instead of ratios for specific age groups as we have in England. In practice, this is similar to the approach to ratios used by childminders in England.

¹² Bkr Calculation tool | Calculation rules \(1ratio.nl\) [Translated to English]

These options are not currently being proposed, and do not form part of this formal consultation.

For childcare providers

13. What are your views on having the following flexibility for 3-4 year olds in your provision?

Where children aged 3-4 are attending a setting for less than 4 hours per day, the ratio of 1:8 can be increased to 1:10 (as in Scotland), although where staff are qualified to Level 6, the ratio of 1:13 would continue to apply.

Recommended response = not more than 300 words

14. What further flexibilities would you consider adopting to deliver your provision?

Multiple choice (select all that apply)

- I. Create greater flexibilities within the ratios for group-based provision, for example when looking after mixed age groups.
- II. Revise the existing qualification requirements needed to be included within the ratio. Examples could include (and are not limited to):
 - a) Allowing staff working towards a qualification to be included within the ratio at the qualification level they are working towards (e.g., a member of staff working towards a Level 3 qualification can be included in ratio as a Level 3, not a Level 2).
 - b) Revising the number of Level 2 and/or Level 3 staff required per ratio under the current rules.
- III. Other, - please include any other options that you would like us to consider, or provide further thoughts on these proposed flexibilities.

Adequate supervision while eating

Background

Mealtimes and snacks for babies and young children can be a high-risk environment for choking incidents¹³.

The EYFS requires that those responsible for preparing food in early years settings are competent to do so. It also stipulates that adequate supervision arrangements must be in place at all times, including while children are eating, and that Paediatric First Aid (PFA) training must ensure competence to help a baby or child who is choking.

It is essential that children under five are within sight of staff members while eating so that immediate action can be taken, if necessary, to ensure their safety.

Proposal and rationale

We intend to change the wording in the EYFS to be explicit that “adequate supervision” while children are eating means that children must always be in sight and hearing of a member of staff – not just within sight or hearing.

Engagement with early years providers to date suggests that for many settings, adequate supervision while eating is already understood to mean that children are within sight of a member of staff. We believe that an explicit requirement in the EYFS will reinforce this practice without an overall impact on staff numbers. This proposal would require a change to paragraph 3.29 of the EYFS via amendments to the EYFS (Welfare Requirements) Regulations 2012:

*Staffing arrangements must meet the needs of all children and ensure their safety. Providers must ensure that children are adequately supervised, including whilst eating, and decide how to deploy staff to ensure children’s needs are met. Providers must inform parents and/or carers about staff deployment, and, when relevant and practical, aim to involve them in these decisions. Children must usually be within sight and hearing of staff and always within sight or hearing. Whilst eating, children must be within sight and hearing of a member of staff.

Annex A: Glossary of terms

Consultation

The process of obtaining comments, views and responses from relevant sources for the purpose of reaching a well-informed and fair decision.

Childcare

Education for a child and any other supervised activity for a child as defined in section 18 of the Childcare Act 2006.

Childminder

An individual providing childcare on domestic premises (usually the childminder's own home). Childminders can also work from non-domestic premises for up to half their time and with up to two other adults.

Childminder agency

Childminder agencies are organisations that register childminders as an alternative to Ofsted. In addition to the registration and quality assurance of childminders, childminder agencies also help childminders with training, business support, advice and finding parents. Parents can also use childminder agencies to find a childminder.

Formal childcare

Childcare provided by those registered with Ofsted or a childminder agency, including nursery schools, nursery classes, reception classes, special day schools, day nurseries, playgroups, childminders, childminder agency-registered provision, nannies or au-pairs, baby-sitters, breakfast clubs, after-school clubs and holiday clubs.

Group-based setting

Childcare providers registered with Ofsted and operating in non-domestic premises.

Informal childcare

Childcare provided by grandparents, ex-husband/wife/partners, older brother/sisters, other relatives, friends or neighbours who are not registered with Ofsted or a childminder agency.

Maintained Nursery Schools

Local authority-maintained schools for 2-, 3- and 4-year-olds.

Private, voluntary and independent nurseries

Run by businesses, charities or community groups, range from small independent nurseries to large chain run settings, including workplace nurseries.

School based nurseries

Nurseries in either local authority maintained or academy primary schools.

Out-of-school settings

OOSS are organisations or individuals that provide tuition, training, instruction or activities to children in England without their parents' or carers' supervision, but are not: schools, colleges, education settings providing alternative provision, 16 to 19 academies or providers caring for children that are registered with Ofsted or a childminder agency. It includes a wide and diverse range of settings such as supplementary schools and tuition centres, extra-curricular clubs, youth groups etc. Some wraparound childcare providers might also be considered an OOSS, depending on their Ofsted registration status.

Wraparound childcare

Childcare provided immediately before and after normal school hours, usually for school aged children. It includes breakfast clubs and after school clubs. This provision can be provided by schools or private providers, either on or away from a school site.

Annex B: Current ratio requirements in England

Staff:child ratios are set out in the Early Years Foundation Stage \(EYFS\) framework.

Please refer to the EYFS for further details on how ratios are applied in different settings, and for the minimum qualification levels which staff must hold, determining how many children they can care for.

Age of child	Staff:child ratio
Under 2	1:3
2	1:4
3 and over	1:8 (or 1:13 if led by a teacher)
Reception (age 4-5)	Subject to infant class size legislation limit of 1:30
Childminders	1:6 under the age of 8 of which no more than three children can be classed as young children (children aged from birth to before 1st September next following the date of the child's fifth birthday) and only one child under age 1 (with exceptions for siblings).
